

Auschwitz Institute for Peace and Reconciliation

"Our mission is to prevent genocide"

2012

Annual Report

Our Mission and Our Work

The Auschwitz Institute launched its programs in 2008 with the mission of building a worldwide network of policymakers with the professional tools and the personal commitment to prevent genocide.

Today, we are the U.S. government's chief nonprofit partner in education and training for genocide and mass atrocity prevention, and civil society partner to the United Nations Office on Genocide Prevention and the Responsibility to Protect for education and training to UN member-states.

Our core program for fostering genocide prevention leadership is the Raphael Lemkin Seminar for Genocide Prevention, a one-week program held on the Holocaust site of Auschwitz in Poland, in cooperation with the Auschwitz-Birkenau State Museum.

Each Lemkin Seminar has 20 to 25 participants, identified through their country's ambassador to the UN or their government's executive branch. Instructors are drawn from organizations worldwide, including scholars, policy practitioners, UN staff, and experts in genocide prevention and human rights. The topics covered include:

- history
- psychology
- diplomacy, mediation, and negotiations
- international law and human rights
- early warning
- military tactics, operations, strategy, and doctrine
- Responsibility to Protect

- economics
- media and communications
- transitional justice

The Lemkin Seminar Global Government edition, co-organized with the UN Office on Genocide Prevention and the Responsibility to Protect, educates justice, defense, foreign affairs, and human rights officials about the causes of genocide and the policy approaches and tools available to prevent it.

The Lemkin Seminar U.S. Military edition, operated in 2010 and 2011, educated officers from the U.S. Army Command and General Staff at Fort Leavenworth about the causes of genocide and protecting civilians and preventing mass atrocities in military operations. Currently we are engaged with the U.S. military in building its capacity to support the work of the U.S. government's Atrocities Prevention Board.

In spring 2012 the Auschwitz Institute launched the Latin American Network for Genocide and Mass Atrocity Prevention, with 18 states throughout Central and South America. As of January 2013, the network has generated 10 national initiatives for the training of officials and formulation of policy for genocide and mass atrocity prevention. In addition to these domestic projects, the first Lemkin Seminar for Latin America will be held in Auschwitz in June 2013.

Based on this same model, we are developing a similar program with the African Union Commission, including the establishment of an annual seminar and an intergovernmental network adapted to the needs of the region.

The goal of both these regional programs is to create a regional network of policymakers, sensitized to early warning signs of genocide and empowered with the tools to respond in a timely manner.

The 2PREVENT Network

To further our mission of building a worldwide network of leaders committed to prevention of genocide, in September 2010 we launched 2PREVENT, a private online forum for Lemkin Seminar alumni and instructors, allowing government policymakers, military officers, and scholars to candidly discuss the latest developments in genocide and mass atrocities and their efforts to combat it. In this way, the Auschwitz Institute is fostering a new generation of leaders who have not only the policy tools to prevent genocide, but also the personal and professional support and political will they need to do so.

As of January 2013, a total of 60 states have taken part in the Auschwitz Institute's programs. Our 250-plus alumni, who represent the world's first government-to-government network for genocide prevention, are now using the lessons they have learned with us to build their states' capacity to save lives.

Also part of this network are the scholars and practitioners from around the world who serve as Lemkin Seminar instructors. They deepen their knowledge through their interaction with policymakers, building a bridge between the academic and practicing worlds that is crucial to advancing policy.
